REGIMENTATION IS FUTILE, SAYS BOLTON OF OHIO

It Disturbs Labor and Has Placed Impossible Restrictions On Business

BUREAUCRACY GROWN

Has Been Fed On Fabulous Sums of the People's Money

WASHINGTON, June 16.—"Fed on fabulous sums of the people's money, bureaucracy has grown under the present Administration with astonishing rapidity and has regimented the farmer, disturbed labor, placed impossible restrictions on business and increased the cost of living without any compensating increase in the purchasing power which was promised so profusely by its misguided sponsors," declared Representative Chester C. Bolton, of Ohio, joint chairman of the Republican Senatorial-Congressional Committee today.

"In short," he went on, "it has meddled to no good purpose, so far as results have shown, in everyone's private affairs, after the manner and fashion of all bureaucracies of all time. Made desperate by the futility of their effort, its sponsors, if not checked, inevitably will demand more and more power and undertake more and more experiments.

"Republicans regard such a system of government as pernicious, undemocratic and un-American—as not justified by any emergency past or present—and will fight to rid the country of it with all their vigor at their command. The Republican Party still believes in a government of laws and not of men. It cannot subscribe to the fallacy now all too prevalent that any emergency can justify the substitution for constitutional government of government by slogans, labels, experiments and personal whims. It has not been converted to the view that governmental economies, pledged by both parties in 1932, and desired by all at that time, have ceased to be desirable. Nor has it come to believe with the New Dealers that we should spend before we earn—that we can borrow and squander ourselves into prosperity.

"Most of all Republicans believe in a representative form of government, as provided for in the Constitution, with its checks and balances between legislative, executive and judicial branches, and all that the term implies. They do not want it changed to any other form, by direction or inclination, by intention or tendency. In the campaign to come they will endeavor to send men to represent them in the legislative branch of the national government who will hold to this view and remain steadfast to this faith."

NEW SERVICE OFFERED BY RE-EMPLOYMENT BUREAU

Fullest Opportunity To Be Offered for Registration of Unemployed

IN THE COMMUNITIES

A schedule of regular visits to various points in Bucks county has been prepared by the National Re-employment Service which it is believed will provide the fullest opportunity for unemployed persons anywhere within the county boundaries to register without being compelled to travel to the County Seat.

In addition Manager C. S. Kratz, of the agency, states that notices will be mailed to all those whose registrations are not up to date, carrying information as to when and where they may meet a representative of the service. Previously filled cards will be checked over and filled in with all available information concerning the applicant.

It has developed that numerous cards which were filled out either by the applicants themselves or by their friends, or some one else not connected with the service, are inadequate in information. The same applies to a number of cards received from the County Emergency Relief Board because the person requested by the Re-employment office failed to appear and register at the time that had been set for that purpose. These cards, in some instances, have nothing but the individual's name and address and are useless as a guide to securing a job.

With the notices that are to be sent out will be included a leaflet upon which will appear the schedule. The schedule itself will be as follows:

At Doylestown, Main Office, National Re-employment Service, Keller Building, 18 East Court street: Every morning except Sunday from 8:30 to 12 noon.

At Bristol, Legion Home, Radcliffe St.: On Monday of each week from 2 to 4 p. m.

At Morrisville, Thos. B. Stockham's office: On Monday of each week, from 10:30 a. m. to 12:30 p. m.

At Perkasie fire house: On Friday of each week from 9 to 11 a. m.

At Quakertown borough hall, Broad street: On Friday of each week from 11:30 a. m. to 12:30 p. m.

At New Hope, Dr. John Flood's office, Main street: On the second and fourth Wednesday of each month between the hours of 9 and 10 a. m.

At Newtown Town Hall, State street: On the second and fourth Wednesday of each month from 11 a. m. to 12:30 p. m.

At Langhorne, Memorial building, Bellevue avenue: On the second and fourth Wednesdays of each month from 2 to 3 p. m.

PRICES DID NOT RISE WHEN GREAT BRITAIN WENT WENT OFF GOLD STANDARD--ONE OF MIRACLES OF BRITISH RECOVERY, SAYS H. R. KNICKERBOCKER

Britain is Still a Capitalistic Country — Profits Are Motive Power of Capitalism—British Capitalists Are Making More Profits—Rewarded to the Tune of $700,000,000 Profits Earned in 1933.

Note: "The miracle of British recovery," writes H. R. Knickerbocker, International News Service correspondent, in the fourth article of his series on that subject, "was that prices did not rise when Great Britain went off the gold standard."

"There was no flight to goods, prices remained nearly stationary. Knickerbocker writes, explaining why this unusual development really aided greatly in British recovery.

LONDON, June 16.—(INS)—Britain is still a capitalist country. Profits are the motive power of capitalism. British capitalists are making more profits. The motor of British capitalism has begun to turn.

First came the stock exchange upturn. In the recovery sweepstakes security values got away for a long lead. Then came the upturn in business. Finally, the real winning horse, industrial profits, has come to the fore at the corner that determines the pace.

For the first time since 1928 it has now proved profitable for business to expand. Business expanded before that. Business took a chance. That is the sense of capitalism. Profits are the reward for taking risks. British business took that risk beginning in 1932, but only today are British businessmen being rewarded.

They are being rewarded to the tune of $700,000,000 profits earned in 1933, and in the first quarter of this year $275,000,000 profit, a rate which it maintained will give British business a profit of $1,100,000,000 for the year, a most substantial increase over 1933 as 1933 was a slight increase over 1932.

How did British business do the trick? How did recovery get its start?

According to conservative British minds, the classical way a recovery begins in a country which is still run more or less on capitalistic lines is about as follows. It is a familiar story but one worth recapitulating for the light it throws on British recovery.

After a period of rocking along on the bottom of the depression certain businessmen observe that stocks are about exhausted. During every depression as a rule prices are falling and because they are falling people postpone buying in the hope of getting a lower price or because their income has been reduced, and because they postpone buying prices go on falling.

Two primary considerations rule the business man: desire for profit and fear of loss. Factories close, and the more factories close the fewer are employed, purchasing power is reduced, still more factories close and so on in the vicious circle familiar to all.

Now however in the ordinary course of capitalist events there is a limit to the circle, vicious though it is. That limit, crudely put is supposed to be the time when stocks are exhausted and prices begin to rise. Then businessmen, scenting profit, begin to produce more, hire more labor, thus increase the purchasing power of the community and so on in the beneficent circle that means recovery and eventual prosperity.

Often, or even usually, some outside event occurs to sharpen the discernment of businessmen, and encourage them to take advantage of this moment and discard their fear or loss and go out for a profit. In America, whatever its eventual outcome, this was one of purposes of the N. R. A.

In Britain the events outside the normal course of economic affairs were the departure from the gold standard September 21, 1931, and the imposition of a tariff March 1, 1932. To this extent, but almost solely to this extent may it be said that the government here did something to bring about recovery.

It was of course important enough, extremely important, that Britain should for the first time in a century abandon her free-trade principles which has made this country the greatest import market in the world. It was doubly important that the pound sterling, most widely used currency in the world, should be depreciated by a third.

It was doubly important that when the pound went off gold the British public took it with characteristic British calm, and with imposing audacity declared that the pound had not gone off gold, but that gold had gone off the pound. For British confidence in their currency meant that it was possible to control the depreciation with no danger of its going into an uncontrollable inflation.

It meant also that prices would alter within the narrow limit of a stabilized currency. It was expected that prices would rise a bit.

But here came the miracle of British recovery. Prices did not rise. There was no flight to goods. Prices remained stationary, or so nearly stationary as makes no matter. The Board of Trade index of wholesale prices shows a maximum fluctuation of six points since Britain went off gold, and the present level is 102.8 compared to 99.5 in September 1931.

This meant that the classical motive power of recovery, rising prices, was lacking. But rising prices were chiefly to be desired to encourage businessmen to take a chance. The fact turned out to be that British businessmen did not need the lure of rising prices. They considered that they could make a profit at the old prices if they could only sell the goods.

Sale of more goods at home seemed assured by the tariff wall and the depreciation of the pound. Sale of more goods abroad was hoped for. The pound's slip meant that British goods were one-third cheaper. But other countries too went off gold, neutralized most of the British advantage, and be-

POLICE TO KEEP WATCH FOR DRUNKEN DRIVERS

No "Breaks" To Be Given To Those Caught in Police Net

STATE PATROL, ALSO

Drunken drivers are not to receive any "breaks" in Bristol and the police here have been referred to a statement issued by Leon D. Metzger, secretary of revenue of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

Secretary Metzger wrote Burgess Anderson calling attention to the increasing accidents in which drunken drivers and drunken pedestrians are involved throughout the state. "They are challenging state and municipal authorities to a concerted drive against this growing menace to highway safety."

Both Superintendent of Public Safety James L. McGee and Chief of Police Linford J. Jones, have been endeavoring to keep Bristol streets clear of this menace and the State Motor Patrol is operating throughout the county along the same lines.

The letter received by Burgess Anderson from Secretary Metzger reads in part:

Increasing accidents in which drunken drivers and drunken pedestrians are involved are challenging State and municipal authorities to a concerted drive against this growing menace to highway safety.

Since the eighteenth amendment was repealed, these types of accidents have practically doubled. From December to April, inclusive, drunken drivers were involved in 750 accidents in which 20 persons were killed. Last year, 472 drunken drivers were involved in 472 accidents during the same months and 15 persons were killed.

The records for the first five months of this year show double the number of accidents in which drunken pedestrians figured. Fifty-seven have been killed in 473 accidents, as compared with 36 killed in 233 accidents during the same period a year ago.

The Department of Revenue, through the Highway Patrol and the Division of Safety, believes it is doing its part and that it has made an early start. The Patrol is making more arrests for drunken driving and is getting a higher percentage of convictions. In March the number of arrests on this charge reached 100 for the first time in seven months. In April the Patrol made 119.

CONGRESS NEARS END

Washington, D. C., June 16.—The dying 73rd Congress raced today toward an adjournment with its leaders demanding the enactment of President Roosevelt's new housing act and labor conciliation bills before allowing the exhausted legislators to leave for their homes. There was every indication Congress would adjourn by nightfall. While there was opposition to both the President's measures, leaders declared it was not sufficient to block enactment of them or the postponement of adjournment until next week.

The possibility of an adjournment this week-end came with startling suddenness after Republican leaders of the Senate reached an accord with the President on the labor conciliation measure. The agreement removed the last obstacle to sending Congress home.

The Senate must pass both measures. The House, which previously enacted the housing bill, must approve the conciliation measure. Both must give final approval to a conference report on the $1,665,000,000 deficiency appropriation bill which carries huge sums for unemployment and drought relief. Minor bills probably will be slipped through in the closing hours.

DAVIS FAILS AS MEDIATOR

Allentown, June 16.—As a mediator for the Loyal Order of Moose, United States Senator James J. Davis today was "a complete bust." Senator Davis, director general of the Order, and Albert H. Ladner, chairman of the executive committee of the Supreme Lodge, came here last night as emissaries of peace in an attempt to smooth the ruffled feelings of suspended members in the Allentown Lodge of the Order. Their "undesired" presence was a signal for a chorus of boos and hisses that rang through the auditorium. The Senator was told by Edward H. Schlechter, dictator of the local lodge, that neither he nor Ladner were privileged to enter the meeting hall without an invitation.

BACK HOME DAY IS OBSERVED AT NEWTOWN

Former Residents Return To Revisit Scenes of Their Youth

SOME MAKE SPEECHES

By Staff Correspondent

NEWTOWN, June 16.—Beneath stately old trees and with the quaint white-washed walls of the Friends Meeting House for a background, former residents of this borough met new friends and renewed old acquaintances yesterday afternoon.

It was the Chamber of Commerce Day and on the gates of welcome constructed at the four entrances to the borough, there was hung this sign: "Welcome Back Home." It was another of the feature days arranged in connection with the 250th anniversary celebration of the founding of Newtown.

The Friends Meeting House, nestled in a grove of trees whose limbs reached far above the structure, formed a fitting place for such an occasion. It was built in 1817 and with its milk-white walls and green shutters it formed one of the places of attraction for those who came back to the old town, to view again the scenes of their childhood.

Kindly disposed members of the Friends Society greeted the guests. The greeters were garbed in colonial costumes and as they moved about upon the greenward, they resembled figures picked from paintings of colonial times.

Reuben P. Kester was chairman of the ceremonies and presented Dr. A. J. Strathie who conducted community singing.

Mr. Kester in his introductory remarks welcomed the guests and said "This day former residents have been invited to return through the courtesy of the Chamber of Commerce."

Dr. Wilmer Krusen, Philadelphia, was the first speaker and said, "The emotions which affect one who comes back to the scenes of his childhood and young manhood grips us for just a moment. We wish for the touch of the vanished hand and for the sound of the voice which is still. This country has produced men and women who are worthwhile and as we sit beneath these trees, let us meditate upon the history of the past."

Dr. Krusen called attention to the large number of young folks going out into the world today, having completed their education in the various schools and colleges. "If these young folks are able to show this old state how to get out of the terrible mess into which you and I have gotten it, they will not have failed."

Mrs. Horace G. Reeder in appropriate verse presented Edwin McKinstry, editor of West Chester Times.

Mr. McKinstry stated that he was

FIREMEN SELECT GROOME PRESIDENT FOR THE 19TH TIME

Bucks County Association Meets in Convention at Newtown

WILL PARADE TODAY

Ladies' Auxiliary Also Meets and Names Officers of Their Association

By Staff Correspondent

NEWTOWN, June 16.—More than 300 volunteer firemen met in the high school auditorium here last night; elected officers of the Bucks County Firemen's Association, transacted routine business and listened to a number of addresses by men of prominence in fire fighting circles throughout Pennsylvania.

While the men were transacting the business of their association the members of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Bucks County Firemen's Association convened in another section of the building, selected their officers, were entertained and later joined the men in the partaking of light refreshments. Nearly 100 women attended the meeting of the Auxiliary.

The firemen will parade here today and plans have been completed for the entertainment of 52 companies from Bucks, Montgomery and Philadelphia counties.

James E. Groome, president, presided over the meeting of the men and after calling the meeting to order there were vocal solos given by Frank J. Sutton, and selections by an orchestra and the high school quartette. The opening prayer was by the Rev. Lewis Sasse, rector of St. Luke's P. E. Church.

William S. Tomlinson, Burgess, extended a cordial welcome to the visiting firemen and in his remarks stated that Newtown appreciated what the firemen have done to aid in the celebration of the 250th anniversary of the borough.

At this point Mr. Tomlinson presented to President Groome a large wooden key inscribed "Welcome Firemen."

Mr. Groome accepted the key and replied stating:

"The Bucks County Firemen's Association welcomes the opportunity to help you celebrate the 250th anniversary of your community. A brief review of the history of the community, reveals the splendid growth and development of Newtown as a borough.

"Your beautiful homes, fine churches, splendid schools, well kept streets, kindly disposed citizens, add to the duties and responsibilities of the firemen whose duty it is to afford fire protection.

"The county association wishes to express its appreciation to the splendid group of firemen here who have so ably looked after firemanic affairs in the community, and through their counsel and co-operation have also helped to develop a splendid fire fighting group throughout the county."

Thirty-two companies answered to the roll call.

A fitting tribute was paid to the late David Voorhees, chief of the Newtown company who died recently.

One of the high lights of the meeting was an animated map of Bucks County prepared by Fire Marshal, William L. Stackhouse, showing the districts wherein the fires of the past year had occurred.

This map mounted upon an easel was illuminated with colored lights. The white lights showed the 44 barns destroyed by fire, green lights the 14 houses, red lights the six deaths, blue lights the two schools and yellow lights the three factories.

Fire Marshal Stackhouse presented his annual report which was of much interest and he was congratulated upon his work of the past year.

In the election of officers James E. Groome was chosen president for the 19th time. Other officers chosen were: Thomas B. Stockham, Morrisville; Lloyd Crouthamel, Dublin, vice president; Raymond Strunk, Quakertown, secretary; Clinton Rife, Silverdale, treasurer; Louis C. Leedom, Yardley, financial secretary; William Stauffer, Sellersville; Winfield S. Cox, Morrisville, trustees.

The September meeting will be held in Perkasie.

Judge Eugene E. Bonniwell, Philadelphia, and a former president of the State Firemen's Ass'n, who was present during the evening, was to have addressed the meeting, but suffered an attack of vertigo and had to return to Philadelphia.

Addresses were made by Dr. Wilmer Krusen, Philadelphia, first president of the Newtown Fire Company; Oscar O. Myer, New York, first president of Bucks County Firemen's Association; Thomas B. Stockham, Morrisville; William T. Muldrew, president, Montgomery County Firemen's Association; Garfield Barbour, Cumberland County Firemen's Association.

The Ladies' Auxiliary elected the following officers:

President, Mrs. Emma Gehman, Perkasie; first vice-president, Mrs. Jean Whyte, Cornwells Heights; second

FATHER'S DAY

Father, better known in the family as "the old man," will come into his own tomorrow, Father's Day.

Mother has had hers, and she deserved it. All honor and glory properly belongs to her. Her position in the home is one of heavy and nerve-racking responsibilities and often equally heavy work.

But this doesn't mean that all is roses for the old man. It is his task to bring home the bacon. This often is not an easy job. Especially has it not been such for the last three or four years. Usually he manages, however, in some way to do it.

Tomorrow he will step forward and bask in the spotlight for a moment. His hair is a little grayer than it was a year ago, and an additional furrow may be on his brow. But he still can smile and feel a little glow of satisfaction at the recognition given him.

Monday he will turn up at the office wearing a new necktie or hat. Well, he deserves it. Today he probably is wearing the same one he put on a year ago. He doesn't mind this, though. He is too busy trying to bring home the bacon to think very much about his personal appearance.

MORE FLYERS NEEDED

Where and how will the navy get enough flyers to man the planes provided for the program to give the United States a treaty-strength navy by 1942?

This question, it is revealed in a recent order issued by the department, is beginning to cause authorities some concern. That a shortage already exists is shown by the order, which reduces by two the number of pilots assigned to battleships and cruisers. Under the new system, untrained officer observers selected from the line personnel of the ships will replace pilots. These will be expected to perform all the duties of aviation except actual piloting of the planes.

The order was made necessary by the need of pilots for the planes of the new air plane carrier, Ranger, soon to be placed in commission. Navy flyers at present are obtained from volunteers from the line personnel of the navy who are able to meet the rigorous physical requirements and stand the training courses at the Pensacola training station. The average number of new flyers obtained annually over the last 12 years has been about 63. In order to meet the naval expansion program an increase of 1,078 pilots over the next seven years will be required, which will be about an average of 154 a year.

A new system of selection, such as appointments from civilian life, or compulsory rather than voluntary assignment to aviation duty, may become necessary. This, fleet officers hold, would be preferable to lowering the present aviation standards.

In view of the popular interest in aviation, the situation seems unusual and disappointing. Should the department throw open aviation to volunteers from civilian life, it appears likely the shortage would be overcome.

Funny man! It takes one year to learn to walk and 50 years to keep still.

Prices Did Not Rise When Britain Quit Gold Standard

sides retailed against the British tariffs by putting up tariffs of their own. The hopes for a greatly increased export trade failed to be realized, though Britain kept her level of exported loss.

Results at home were incomparably better. The tariff was at first a flat ten per cent on practically everything. Later it was raised for various commodities. Depreciation of the pound automatically made most imported goods thirty per cent more expensive. Although it may be said that these two factors increased the price of imported articles by at least fifty per cent.

This meant naturally an enormous advantage to the home producer. One after another businessmen cast off their fears and went for their share of the new home market. There were 636 new factories opened in 1932 and 463 in 1933, and 174 factories extended in 1932 and 95 in 1933. Although these new works gave employment to 83,250 hands, a more considerable index of expansion is new capital issues. They totaled $1,400,000,000 in 1933, or one-third more than 1932 and double 1931.

The big expansion however came in existing plants. First one industrialist and then another put to work his idle machinery. As each plant took on more hands and placed orders for material, other plants producing that material were able to increase production, hire new hands. With each increase of employment the purchasing power of the community increased, and so the beneficent circle went.

The fact that prices had remained stable meant that as employment increased, purchasing power had a chance to grow and not merely to run a race with rising prices. With stable prices and increased employment it was not necessary to raise wages in order to increase purchasing power. The index of money wages has in fact remained practically stationary from 1923 to today.

These are the facts of British recovery however they may clash with the theory of the necessity of rising prices plus rising wages.

Summarized, the tariff gave the impetus to the return of confidence, first to sense it was the stock market. Three months after the tariff became effective stock values started up in June 1932. The index of business activity shows that industrial recovery did not begin until the autumn of 1932. Since then they have raced along parallel to each other.

Starting from the last low of about 75, as compared with 1924's 100, the economists' index of business activity has steadily climbed until it is around 110. Full recovery will not have been reached until it hits around 120, the point that would care for the increase in population and the normal expansion of productivity per head.

During the first year of increased business activity business men were trading on their nerve. They were betting on recovery. Their new activity brought them little or no extra profits for a year. Only at the end of 1933 did their ledgers justify their confidence.

In that year, for the first time in five years the net earnings of 1945 concerns showed a rise. It was a modest one of only $3,000,000 above 1932. That made an increase of one-half per cent in earnings. But it is the trend that counts. They paid dividends of $620,000,000 or 5.8 per cent on capital and put away $80,000,000 in reserve, which meant 11.5 per cent of the net earnings.

In the first quarter of 1934 the 547 companies reporting showed an increase of $14,000,000 profits over the first quarter of 1933, and this meant an increase of more than 5 per cent. They paid dividends of $225,000,000 or 7.5 per cent on capital and put away $50,000,000 in reserve which meant 18.5 per cent of the net earnings.

These figures indicate the sound disposition of profits. Not all of them are spent on peaches. Still better results came in April, when 188 companies reported an aggregate rise in profits of nearly 13 per cent, above April 1933.

Nearly every branch is making money. Breweries, electric plants, financial and land companies, iron, coal and steel, automobiles, rubber, to name a few, are making money. Even the children, shipping and textiles show increased profits. Only retail trade, which is said to be the last to begin to make money in a recovery, failed to show improvement. It's turn is hoped for this year.

But what will happen when British industry has replaced all the articles of foreign manufacture now excluded by the tariff and the currency depreciation? Will British industry be able to absorb the more than 2,000,000 remaining unemployed if exports do not improve? That is another story.

Meanwhile the stock market is up. Profits are up. These figures are on paper. How does it look in the coal mines, the steel mines, the actual sources whence these figures come?

"MA CINDERELLA" by Harold Bell Wright

CHAPTER XXXIV.

"Will you please explain this nonsense?" said Diane, wrathfully. They shrieked with malicious delight.

"You tell her, Sally."

Mrs. McBride explained with mock gravity: "Why, you see, dearie, we-uns have discovered a modern version of the old story wherein the gracious king knights the poor beggar, so that poor beggar may with propriety wed the beautiful princess. In this new down-to-date edition the rich princess finances the poor backwoods moonshiner mother so that said princess may with more or less propriety have the beggar son."

Diane faced them calmly now. "All of which means, I suppose, that you have discovered Ann Haskel and her son living in my old home."

"Have we discovered them?" shouted the chorus. "You don't know the half of it, dearie." "Ann Haskel is throwing a party for us." "All the Lodge crowd are invited." "And are we-uns a-goin'!" "I'll say we're goin' and how!"

Diane asked, scornfully: "And would you actually be so crude as to accept an invitation for the sole purpose of making game of your hostess? Really, it doesn't appeal to me as funny."

"It'll be seeds more fun than any slumming expedition we ever pulled." "Ozark Ann will be a bigger card than that Apache Indian Bess Converse had on her string last season." "Yes, or Nell Godwin's pet prize fighter." "Besides, if we go to Ann's party she'll be bound to come to our Wilderness Club ball." "Oh, boy! Oh boy! won't that be a riot!" "A regular knockout." "Ma Cinderella in person!"

"But it isn't decent of you!" Diane protested. "Really, for well-bred people, I don't see how you can do such a thing."

They received this with a chorus of jeers. "You're a good one to preach to us." "You're qualified to tell us what well-bred people should do!" "Yeah after last summer." "Look what you're doing yourself—you're actually keeping your John Herbert and his ma." "It's really more your party than 'tis Ann's. You know dearie, your home, your money."

Desperately the girl told them about the fortune Ann had inherited. She even tried to explain her motive in establishing the mountain home and her son in the Carroll home. She insisted that neither Ann nor John Herbert knew of her interest in them or that they were living in her home or that she was in the city.

Her tormentors received her explanation with jeers and wisecracks, and continued ragging her without mercy. It was Mrs. Jones-Williams who fired the parting shot. "We'll see you at the party, dearie."

"Indeed you will not!" Diane retorted, warmly. "I have a few shreds of self-respect left even after living with you and your crowd all summer. Besides, as I told you, Mrs. Haskel doesn't even know I am in town."

When her departing callers were safely in the elevator Diane hurried to the telephone. Upon receiving an answer to her call, she said, "Wilson."

"Yes, Miss Diane." "Be careful, don't speak my name. They may hear you." "Very good, miss, I'm sorry. But it's quite all right."

"Listen, Wilson, I must see you at once. Can you manage to slip away? Something terrible has happened."

"Very good, miss. Yes, I can manage. It's about the party. I suppose."

"It is, but we mustn't talk about it over the phone. Please come as soon as you can."

"Very good, miss. I shall be with you immediately."

of her proposed party, John Herbert, naturally, was not a little disturbed.

"But, mother," he said gently, "you can't invite that Wilderness Club crowd here."

"I'd sure admire to know why I can't."

"Because—the well—because it wouldn't be the thing to do. It's quite impossible."

"It's quite impossible to me that's anything impossible about it. I reckon I can afford to have a party if I want."

"I know, mother, but it's not a question of expense."

"What air hit a question of, then?"

"It's a matter of social differences, mother. You know, we don't belong in the same class with the Wilderness Club people."

"You mean them Lodge folks hold their noses above we-uns, I reckon. Well, son, I used to feel they were better'n me. Then I got to know 'em an' I begun to think maybe I was as good as them. Here lately I've come to know doggone well that we-uns air a sight better'n what they be. Look at Mr. Belden. He ain't no ways ashamed to be friends with we-uns. Makes hissef regular home folks. Ain't ary one of that Lodge bunch could even come within sight of him for equality."

"It's not exactly a question of being ashamed, either," John Herbert persisted.

"Wal, what in thunder is hit a question of, then? 'Pears like hit's blamed hard fer me to git what you're drivin' at, son."

The young man was forced to admit that it was somewhat difficult to explain it, simply this, mother; these people are just not in our set."

"That's what Wilson 'lowed, but I done told him I'd set them." The mountain woman's face was grim.

"But I tell you, mother, if you attempt such a thing you will only bring disappointment and humiliation upon yourself. Please believe me, won't you?"

"Seems like I can't believe you, son, 'cause you're plum' wrong. I know I ain't goin' to be disappointed, 'cause they've all done said they'd come. As fer the humiliation, we'll jest have to see 'bout that later."

The young man gasped. "Mother! You're not telling me that you have already invited these people and that they have accepted?"

"I sure am a-tellin' you jest that. Soon's ever Wilson told me they'd come home, I up an' asked 'em. You see, I'd done give Wilson his orders to let me know. Maybe I tell you, so's you won't be a-faultin' him, that Wilson tried to git me not to do hit. I done told him, though, as how I had my reasons."

"But can't you see, mother, that we have nothing in common with such people?"

"At this," Ann laughed slyly. "Pears like as how you done changed your mind since last summer, son. I used to think, from the way you war allus a hangin' round the Lodge, you war right smart; common with 'em."

The young man retorted with some spirit: "You know very well it was not the Lodge crowd that invited me. I warn you, mother, if that gang of mooners do come to your party, it will only be to make fun of you. They will simply lay themselves out to make you ridiculous. Have you forgotten all about what they proposed to do for Ma Cinderella?"

Ann Haskel's face set in the old hard lines and her black eyes shone dangerously. "I don't reckon you know your maw so very well yit, Herb," she drawled. "If you did you'd sure know that Ann Haskel ain't fergittin' nothin' like that. I ain't never goin' to fergit what I hysked them Lodge folks say 'bout me c'ill I've squared hit with 'em fer good an' all."

"Then why put yourself in their hands by giving this party?"

"I figger hit's the other way 'round, son. I ain't aimin' to put mysef in their hands. I'm aimin' fer them to put theise ves in mine."

of hopelessness. "I give it up. It's too much for me."

"Mebbe so," Ann admitted, cheerfully, "but I sure got hit all figgered out. Didn't I hysker them a-talkin' what fun hit'd be to make a foot out of old Ann Haskel? Didn't I hear them a-wantin' to take Ma Cinderella to the city so's they could laugh at her? I hysker all the names they called me behind my back. An' I hysker 'em a-tellin' how sorry they war fer you on account of you havin' such an ignorant old she-hellion fer a mother. Wal, son, I'm askin' 'em all to this year party of mine so's to give 'em a good chance to go right ahead and say they 'lowed they'd do to me if they had me in the city. I aim fer them to git all the fun they can out of me—which mebbe won't be so much as they're a-figgerin' on."

"I done give orders to Wilson that my party's got to be every bit an' as grand as any of theirs ever war, an' a little mite more so. When I've showed 'em what I can do, I'll feel some better 'bout that Ma Cinderella joke."

"You have told Wilson to go as far as he likes? You have given him a free hand?"

"I sure have, son. I told him I wanted him to fix up a regular humdinger. I don't care what she costs. He says he's got the only woman in the whole world what can fix up the exact kind of a party what ought to be give in this house, an' that she's right on the job a-doin' hit."

As the date set for the party drew near John Herbert's uneasiness increased. The young man suffered in anticipation all the agonies which he foresaw he and his backwoods mother would be forced to endure at the hands of their unfeeling guests—the ridiculing comments, the sly allusions and scarcely concealed laughter of that ill-mannered wisecracking crowd. Why on earth couldn't his mother see what she was letting herself and him in for? If only she had consulted him before going ahead with her crude backwoods idea. But now it was too late. The thing was done. His mother had trapped herself and him. They were to be exhibited for the amusement of the spectators. These people would come in the spirit of people on a holiday excursion to the zoo.

But, in spite of John Herbert's certainty that his mother was making herself ridiculous, and in spite of his indignation and anger that he should be forced to endure such humiliation, there was a deeper feeling of sympathy with her. The young man knew, instinctively, exactly how his mother felt toward the Lodge crowd, and, on all, was in hearty accord with her. It was the mountain woman's crude methods and the possibility of failure which exasperated her son. His sympathy with her purpose, and his understanding and admiration of her spirit led him, finally, to resolve that he would see the thing through. To the best of his ability the best of the Haskels would second his backwoods mother in her fantastic affair of honor.

Under the skilled hands of decorators and florists the old Carroll house put on all the gala beauty and social pomp of its former years when by the divine right of "quality" it had reigned supreme. Not since the death of Diane's mother had the place been so joyously alive. During the years of Aunt Jessica, as the members of the old social clan had retreated before the advancing modern city hordes, the Carroll place, refusing to surrender, had withdrawn more and more into its lonely self. Behind the stone wall and iron gates it lived alone. Surrounded on every side by business blocks and apartment houses, deserted by its own kind, it had had for years no part in the social pageant which it formerly led so proudly.

As Ann Haskel said the day of their arrival, "Hit's jest like that their fairy place whar the princess an' everything war asleep waitin' fer the prince to come along an' wake 'em all up with a kiss."

DESCRIBES COSTUMES WORN BY WOMEN AT LONGCHAMPS RACES

I. N. S. Fashion Correspondent

PARIS—(INS)—Brilliant sunshine attracted a huge crowd to the big race at Longchamps, at which Mrs. Honore Palmer, of Chicago, had her horse, Darkbrow, come in third. Everybody from everywhere was present.

The Countess de Jumilhac, just back from America, wore a black crepe dress printed in tiny bunches of flowers. Mme. Martinez de Hoz, wife of another great horse owner, wore one of the new disc hats, the brim of which was black, the crown and band under the brim being white. The Princess de Faucigny-Lucinge, who also had a horse running, wore a light blue coat with a navy blue fox collar and hat matching. The brim was turned up on one side with blue aigrettes snuggling in, giving a soft effect that was most effective.

WRIGHT SCORES SHUT-OUT OVER JEFFERSON A. C.

(By T. M. Juno)

Baseball fans on Leedom's field last night were treated to the best hurling duel this season as Mel Wright, of Edgely, opposed "Hokey" Leighton, of the Jefferson A. A. When the final tabulations were made Wright had checked in with his second shut-out triumph since his debut in the Twilight League.

Wright held the Jeffersonians scoreless throughout and limited them to two bingles as his mates were finding the offerings of Leighton for three hits. However, in the fifth inning the Braves scored an unearned tally which gave them a 1-0 victory.

Leighton fanned ten batters, one more than his adversary. He was cool and collective and he was defeated because Wright's mates took advantage of a misplay to count the only tally of the match.

Wright allowed only one player to reach as far as second base and that came in the second inning when Di-Tanna singled to left and stole second. Only three other players reached base, two on passes and Tullio on a single.

The only run of the game came in the fifth. Dougherty's fly fell in right field for a single. On the hit and run play, Wright bounced to third baseman Tosti. Tosti's throw to first beat the runner and Dougherty headed for third. Tullio in his hastiness to complete a double-play threw low to the third sack and the baserunner counted.

Bud Wright was the only other Edgelyite to reach as far as second base. He got to first via an error in the seventh and stole second.

It was the tenth straight win for the Braves, giving them a clean slate for the first half. On Wednesday night on Leedom's field, the Hibernians will meet St. Ann's A. A. in the final contest of the Twilight first half.

Back Home Day Is Observed at Newtown

born in Camden but came here when quite young. "Fifty-three years ago I set my first stick of type in the office of the Enterprise and in those days the week's work was not done until those within a radius of three miles of Newtown, had taken their Saturday night's bath and read the Enterprise. I lived here eight years during my teen age, residing on Chancellor street which was and is the best in town and as good as any street in New York, Paris, Berlin or any of those other places."

The speaker recalled the activities of the schools of his days, the church and the dramatic society, all of which he claimed went to help a young man to "get along."

Charles G. Ellis, brother of William E. Ellis, owner and publisher of the Delaware Valley Advance, was next called upon and was introduced by his brother, the publisher.

"I have been out of the community for 50 years and I first came here 69 years ago next September. We stayed here awhile and then went with father to Buckingham and remained there four years. I remember the building of the Newtown-Doylestown Pike. I recall the builders of that road with their stone hammers as they hewed the rock for the roadway. They wore red flannel shirts so as not to get rheumatism.

"Do you remember 'Bilby' Tomlinson and his four-horse stage coach?" asked the speaker.

Then recalling the 15 industries of his boyhood which were located here, he mentioned the wagon shop, agriculture works, fifth-wheel shop, lumber yard, tobacco factory, saw mill, butchering establishments, brick yard and the broom factory.

"Up in Doylestown they have erected a building in which to house the tools of the empire builders. We had the tools of the empire builders right here."

J. Wilmer Lundy, chairman of the committee, was called to make a few remarks, but stated that he could not be classed as among the early settlers or Newtown, because he did not come here until 1900.

Dr. Walter H. Mohr, professor of history at George School, gave a pleasing historical talk in which he wove in a most interesting manner the early history of the borough.

Professor J. Harry Hoffman, superintendent of county schools, read excerpts from a book of clippings kept and prepared by the late Hugh B. Eastburn, a former superintendent of the schools of Bucks County. These clippings were of articles written by those who many years ago lived in Newtown. Among them were articles copied by Kate Titus and written by Sallie Hicks at the age of 17. A composition on "Snow" written by Anna M. Wood, 12. Other clippings were of stories by Frank H. Longshore, 13; Josie R. Walton, 16; Maggie Mather, 16; Harper H. Smith, 13; Charles B. Smith, 10; William P. Hicks, 11. Another included the analysis of a sentence by the late Judge William C. Ryan of New Hope.

Professor Hoffman pleaded that credit be given to the little red school house for what it had done for our people.

J. Walton Naylor, publisher of Allent
